CMS 205 was selected to introduce critical thinking because it is a lower level course. The assignment requires the creation of four original arguments in support of a student's position on a controversial topic, with each argument supported by evidence that passes stringent credibility guidelines. Students are then required to participate in a debate presenting and defending their arguments while also critically analyzing and attacking counter-arguments. Audience members (made up of students who are not participating in the debate) engage in the critical analysis of the arguments presented by their debating peers. (04/26/2017)

	CMS faculty started requiring more individual speeches and individual papers instead of group papers or presentations in CMS 205. Criterion: Did the faculty change emphasis to have more individual assignments?	Result Status: Result Closed-No further action needed Result/Observation Type: Strength The change was made to hold students rather than groups accountable for demonstrating mastery of program outcomes. Based on results of program assessment data, one contributing factor of the lower scores might be due to the fact that students strong in written and critical thinking skills do the majority of the work for group projects. This does nothing to help students weak in these areas. This allows CMS to more accurately measure individual achievement regarding critical thinking skills rather than giving the same grade to an entire group. (04/26/2017)
	CMS faculty used the Critical Thinking Rubric to assess CMS 495 Leadership -- the department capstone course on Assurance of Learning Day in September 2015. The rubric is attached. Criterion: 75% of graduating seniors needed to score a 3 out of 5 in order to demonstrate competency in critical thinking.	Result Status: Result Closed-No further action needed Result/Observation Type: Strength Because students fell short of the 75% mark, faculty discussed how to improve their efforts on critical thinking. They decided they needed to introduce it sooner and reinforce it more often. This assessment method is integrated in all three program objectives, so the related documents will be uploaded here, but not in the other two objectives. I am not retyping all the language associated with the assessment method -- See Objective 1. (04/21/2017)

	Schedule: Annually CMS identified more courses in our current curriculum where we can introduce and reinforce outcomes for the program outcomes that did not meet our program criterion. This particular assessment is integrated for our three program objectives: Critical Thinking, Written Communication, and Oral Communication. Since these are integrated, I noted them in the other two program objectives, but I did not retype all the information. This assessment method is integrated in all three objectives. (Active)	Result Status: Result Closed-No further action needed Result/Observation Type: Strength The change was made because 75% of CMS majors were not meeting the set criterion of a 3 or higher for all the program outcomes. (04/21/2017)	Meaningful Changes: CMS is still creating a baseline for the courses, including the creation of new rubrics. A CMS curriculum map with syllabi that demonstrates these SLOs are taught in the individual classes (See attachments. Curriculum map for the instructors who teach these courses with an I and R). I did not reattach all the evidence as they can be found in Objective 1 -- curriculum map and syllabi. (04/21/2017)

	CMS faculty made a greater attempt in 2015-2016 to engage with students outside the classroom, while leveraging oral communication skills they learned in class. Criterion: Did students and faculty engage classroom skills outside the classroom in a presentation?	Result Status: Result Closed-No further action needed Result/Observation Type: Strength In informal conversations, CMS faculty decided to engage students more outside the classroom, taking the oral communication skills developed in class and applying them in professional settings. Literature and anecdotal evidence indicates the value of application in community settings. Both of these contest submissions came out of her CMS 499 class work. The 2015 CBCC competition was held at Berea College and is a regional competition between colleges and universities in eastern Kentucky focused on entrepreneurship and business development. Teams and individuals compete through written and oral presentations and are evaluated by a panel of expert judges coming from a variety of fields. Ms. Emily Watson was awarded a $1,250 prize. Idea State U contest, held at Hazard Community & Technical College this 2015, is a regional competition designed to encourage innovation and entrepreneurship by engaging
